PORCH CULTURE

The development of the east end neighborhood in Cincinnati is so much a work in progress as it is a rearticulation of an architectural zone our vacancy. Vacant buildings and lots exist in many of our neighborhoods but are often seen as blight. The idea of Porch Culture refers to the lingering porches and architectural elements that are usually present in the east end typology. The porch is a social place where people gather and interact in this condition where marginal building and the successful community collided.
