Helping Children with Traumatic Stress

The Sandy Hook Elementary School shooting raises many issues, but one still requiring closer examination is how small children respond to trauma and what can be done to effectively intervene when trauma occurs. The National Institute of Mental Health has a parents’ education guide on trauma called “Helping Children and Adolescents Cope with Violence and Disasters.” A copy of this guide is available for download at http://www.tinyurl.com/little-kids-1. You can also visit the ‘Connecticut’ tab on the homepage of www.MyIMPACTSolution.com for articles providing advice on coping with such trauma. If you have any questions or concerns around addressing a child in need, please call IMPACT’s 24/7 hotline at 800-227-6007 for immediate, in the moment support and a referral to a professional for additional assistance if necessary.

Workplace Gossip: Rules for the Road

According to a study published in the Journal of Applied Social Psychology, up to 90% of workplace conversation is gossip. It appears that this type of natural human interaction is driven by the desire to warn group members against the harmful or inappropriate behavior of others. So not all gossip is strictly bad, but a few rules for the modern workplace are important: 1) Don’t try to eradicate gossip or scold others for engaging in it. Instead model proper behavior for others. 2) If you gossip, do so in small doses. Researchers say those who gossip excessively or with too many people are perceived as untrustworthy. 3) Become a listener rather than a talker. 4) Keep your own comments about others positive and brief. 5) Hesitate to engage in trivial gossip about others. 6) Avoid taking sides in personal disputes. 7) Evaluate trustworthiness and credibility of others before acting on gossip. 8) Not everything you hear is true—ask follow-up questions. 9) Walk away when gossip becomes nasty or personal or part of an employee’s consistent bad-mouthing of others. Obesity, type 2 diabetes, and even heart disease are growing problems among youth, making it crucial to instill a desire to participate in regular exercise. Of course, physical benefits of exercise are just the beginning. Improved mental health and managing future stress are important too. Rule #1: Don’t put exercise on par with household chores. Don’t link it to pain or drudgery. Instead ask, “How can I make exercise something that is associated in my child’s mind with enthusiasm, excitement, fun, and a feeling of accomplishment?” Part of the answer is modeling these emotional states yourself, both before and after exercise. Start young and begin this link-building early. Down the road, you’ll be amazed by the results of your positive parenting. New Year’s Resolutions: Producing the Magic of Motivation

If you have not committed to any New Year’s resolutions, you still likely hope for a productive year. Productivity is about getting things done, and that means fending off procrastination. To fire up your commitment to follow through, experiment this year with letting people know that you are going to complete whatever difficult project you have in mind, so they are positioned to hold you accountable. Really put yourself out there, even if it means supplying a calendar marked with the very day they should contact you for a success report on the final results. Do you have friends who would love to give you a ribbing about not following through? These are your personal wizards of motivation. Does the sound of this strategy create fear and trepidation? Then—bingo—this may be the one strategy to put you over the top. Implement this motivation strategy and you will witness the magic of motivation that will compel you to act, with the upside of eliminating the struggle of mustering willpower. Avoid Teaching Emotional Eating “Comfort food”—it has a pleasant inviting sound to it, but it refers to the inappropriate use of food for purposes other than to satisfy nutritional needs or hunger. Research has shown that weight gain is strongly associated with emotional eating, even more so than with any other lifestyle factor. Tying emotions to food can happen quickly and be reinforced unwittingly. What did you learn about food and feelings growing up? Are you passing the “use food for comfort” message to those you love? Boredom, anger, depression, happiness, loneliness, stress, and resentment are common feeling states that trigger eating behaviors. To intervene, learn more about emotional eating. The latest book on this subject will be released in June 2013, “Why Can’t My Child Stop Eating? A Guide to Helping Your Child Overcome Emotional Overeating” by Debbie Danowski, Ph.D. You can find it at online bookstores like Amazon.com. Resource: http://www.tinyurl.com/comfort-food-1.
