CURRENT RESEARCH INTERESTS

In general, I am interested in the relationship between social contexts and healthy development. Currently my research examines the impact of armed conflict and militarization on aspects of social and human development. Specifically, my research estimates the impact of conflict, the development of armies (using the military participation ratio), and aspects of military spending (e.g., praetorian militarization) on outcomes such as child mortality and other measures of the life chances of civilian populations.
