SEAN HUGHES has over 25 years of professional documentary, photojournalism and design experience. He is currently a working documentary director, videographer, photojournalist and ultimately a full-time Associate Professor in Photojournalism and Design at the University of Cincinnati, where all of these interests merge into a rich and rewarding teaching environment.

His feature-length documentary "The Intimate Realities of Water" won Best Documentary and Best Overall Film at the Los Angeles International Film Festival. It was also a finalist for Best Documentary at the Paris Arts and Music Awards. In the North Carolina Film Awards it was selected as the winner of its Board of Director's Award. At the Hollywood International Independent Documentary Awards it won Best Cultural Feature, Best First-Time Filmmakers, Best Writer, and Best Narration awards. At the United International Film Festival it took home first place for best documentary, and it is currently nominated for the Louisville International Festival of Film.

Hughes was the Art Director for both "CityBeat" newspaper and "The Sondheim Review" magazine. His photojournalism assignments run the gamut, from NCAA basketball finals and extensive documentary studies in Cuba, India, the Middle East, Kenya, Tanzania and Costa Rica, to coverage of medical teams in Oaxaca, Mexico, and other magazine features to name a few.

As Art Director at "CityBeat," Hughes was responsible for staff management, project management, color and pagination workflow development, photo editing, web site design and development, digital graphic design, client reviews and special publication development. While at "CityBeat" he won over 20 local, state and national awards for photography, web and graphic design from Ohio and Cincinnati Society of Professional Journalists, Cleveland Press Club, Association of Alternative Newspapers (AAN) and AWN, including two-time Ohio SPJ's Designer of the Year (2004 and 2006).
