During his tenure at Cleveland State, he moved from International Advisor to Associate Dean of Students and the Director for the Center for International Students and Programs. After completing his Bachelor's degree at John Carroll University, he went on to earn his graduate degree in Public Administration at the Graduate School of Public and International Affairs at the University of Pittsburgh. Prior to beginning his professional career in international education, Burke joined the Peace Corps and spent seven months in Sanniquelle, Liberia as a community development volunteer.

Burke has been an active member and leader within the field of international education. He has served many roles within NAFSA: Association of International Educators, including two terms as chair of Region VI. In addition to being a member of the Ohio International Consortium since its inception and serving as its chair from 2009-2011, he developed the Study Ohio program, a collaboration between the public and private universities in Ohio developed to better market higher education opportunities in the state to prospective international students.
